ASK THE EXPERT

Is it normal for me to be an introvert? I don't talk much socially and have only two best friends due to which college is a bit stressful. - Anonymous

Hi Anonymous,

I won't say being introvert is abnormal. There are many people in the world, in fact many great leaders like Bill Gates, Mark Zuckerberg who though being introverts, have high achieved success in their lives. Being introvert becomes a problem when you start losing faith in your self or when it stops you from expressing yourself when it is actually needed. We all face some sort of hesitation while meeting new people or opening up to someone whom we barely know. So as a first step stop judging yourself, there is absolutely nothing wrong in being an introvert, Stop pulling yourself back when you meet people just go with the flow and speak your mind you will find many people will soon join in when they understand how lovely your thoughts are .

Finally and the most important step - SMILE, because you never know you will fall for that beautiful smile!
